JAMÁICA, the island of Jamaica, discover'd by Columbus in his second voyage, lying between 17 and 18 deg. of north latitude, about 170 miles in length, and 70 in breadth. A long chain of mountains runs the whole length of it, and divides the north from the south part. It was taken from the Spaniards by Oliver Cromwell.

JAMAS, never.

JAMBS, the jambs of a door, the two posts on the sides of it. So called by artists from the French jambe, a leg.

JAMBO, a sort of fruit in the East Indies, pleasant to the sight, and very delicious both for scent and taste. The tree that produces it is as large as the biggest orange-trees in Spain, very thick of boughs, making a fine shade, and pleasing to the sight. The trunk and boughs are of a dark colour, and easily break. The leaf is beautiful and smooth, of a bright green on the outside, and a darker within, about a span long. The fruit is about as big as a good pear, and there are two sorts of it; some of such a dark brown, that they almost look black, and most of these have no stone in them, and are the best in all respects; the others are white, and have a white stone, hard, and as big as a peach-stone, smooth, and cover'd with a white downy skin; these, tho' fit for the nicest palate, are not so good as the others. They smell like a rose, and are cold and moist, and very soft in the mouth; the rind so thin and tender, that it cannot be par'd off with a knife. The trees are always full of fruit and blossom, all the ground under it cover'd with blossoms, which look like scarlet, fresh coming out as the old falls off; so that there is blossom, green and ripe fruit all at once. Christ. Acct. nat. hist. E. Ind.

LLAMAS, a sort of cattle peculiar to the kingdom of Peru, which the Spaniards call carneros de las indias, or West India sheep; the flesh of them is good to eat, as our mutton, and the wool for cloathing; besides they serve for beasts of burden, like horses or asses, and have no charge of shoeing, of pack-saddles, or corn to feed them, being satisfy'd with what grass they find. There are two sorts of them, the one call'd pacos, which are woolly, the others are smoother, but better for burden. They are all bigger than our largest sheep, and somewhat less than large calves; their neck is long like a camel's, and they have need of it to graze, being very tall. Some are quite white, others quite black, others grey. Their lambs are the best meat in the world. These sheep are drove in flocks of 100, 500, or 1000 together, like pack-horses, with their loads of all sorts of commodities; and it is they that carry all the silver from the mines of Potosi to Arica, which is 70 leagues; and formerly they carry'd it to Arequipa, which is 150 leagues. Every sheep commonly carries about an hundred weight, or an hundred and a half; but if they are to travel far, they go but 2, 3, or at most 4 leagues a-day; if it be but for one day's journey, one of these sheep will carry two hundred weight, or more, and will travel between 8 and 10 leagues. They naturally affect cold, and therefore live most on the mountains, and die often with heat in the plains. The smooth sheep will sometimes stop on a sudden, and stand a long time gazing a man in the face, that it will make one laugh to see them; but now and then they will take a fright, and run away to the mountain, so that not being able to overtake them, they are forc'd, for fear of losing the plate, to shoot them. The pacos, or woolly sheep, sometimes take pct under their burden, and lie down, and then they may kill them sooner than make them rise. The way the Indians use to get them up, is to stop, and sitting down by them, to stroke, and make much of them till their anger is over, which is sometimes two or three hours. F. G. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 45. p. 293.

MADÉ'XA, a skein of thread, silk, worsted, or the like. Lat. mataxa.

Madéxa sin quenda, a skein without an end fastened, to keep it from ravelling; met. a lazy, slatternly person; because when one end of a skein is loose, it all tangles.

Saber vender sus madéxas, to be sharp, to understand one's business.

MADEXITA, a little skein of thread, &c.

MADRA'STRA, a step-mother. In cant. a chain or a goal.

Prov. La madrastra y entenada siémpre son en baraja: The stepmother and stepdaughter are always at variance.

Prov. Madrastra madre áspera, ni de cera, ni de pasta: A stepmother an harsh mother, good neither of wax nor of dough. To express that stepmothers of no sort are good.

MA'DRE, a mother. Lat. mater.

Madre de río, the channel of a river.

Madre, the matrix, the womb.

Madre is also the common sewer in a street, so called, because it receives all the kennels that run into it; thence also the great drain or trench in the fields, into which all the small ones run, which are therefore called kijuelas, or little daughters.

Madres, or Matrizes, so the founders call the moulds in which they cast any thing.

Madre de pérlas, mother of pearl.

Mal de madre, the distemper among women called the fits of the mother.

Prov. Qual la madre, tal la bija: Like mother, like daughter.

Prov.

Prov. Mádre vieja y camisa rota, no es deshonra: An old mother and a torn shirt are no disgrace. To signify, that age and poverty are no dishonour, tho' the latter be contemned by the world, yet with virtue it is honourable.

Prov. Mi madre andadora, finó es en su casa, en todas las otras mora: My rambling mother lives in all other houses but her own. A reproof to gadding women, who love to be in all other houses of the town but her own.

Prov. Quién no cree a buena madre, cree a mala madrastra: He that does not believe a good mother, will believe a bad stepmother. That is, he who is not pleased when he is well, will be forced to be contented when he is worse.

Prov. Casos madre: Mother marry. This short proverb, they say, took its rise from a widow who had a great mind to marry; but having a son grown up who was a scholar, he always opposed it violently, and she persisted in her resolution; wherefore at length she told him, if he would do one thing she should enjoin him, she would not marry: He consented; and he being then very full of the itch, she said, if he did not scratch himself in three days, she would lay aside all thoughts of an husband. The young man was closely watch'd, and before many hours were pass'd, had occasion enough to scratch, but forbore because of the contract. Thus he continued some time; but the itching increasing, he could not hold at last, and so falling to scratch to his own content, he cry'd out, Mother, marry. The contract was void, and he could resist no longer. It is apply'd to those who consent others should do what they please, so they have the same liberty themselves.

Prov. Mádre, que cosa es casar? Hija, bilár, parir, y llorar. Mother, what is it to marry? Daughter, to spin, to bring forth children, and to weep. The daughter asks her mother what matrimony is; she gives her this dismal account, that it is no other but labour, bearing of children, and trouble. These are the words of some unfortunate wife, who spoke of matrimony as perhaps she had found, and are used by such as have occasion to it.

Prov. Mádre, casar, casar; que carrapico me quiere llevar: Mother, marry me, marry me; for the gull will carry me away. Carrapico is a sea-gull, and metaphorically any stranger that haunts a place. The daughter advises her mother to marry her off quickly, for fear the stranger carry her away. To let her know she is in haste for an husband, and if not soon marry'd, she shall run away with the next that asks her. Applicable to young girls that are too forward.

Prov. Bien cuenta la madre, mejor cuenta el infante: The mother reckons well, but the child reckons better. For the mother is often mistaken in her account of going with child, but the infant will be born at its due time.

Prov. La madre y la hija por dar y tomar son amigas: The mother and the daughter are friends by giving and taking. That is, they love one another for what they get of one another. Apply'd to those who entertain friendship only for interest, which has so far prevailed, that even many parents and their children have no other mutual affection, but for what they get of one another.

Prov. La buena madre no dice, quieres? A good mother does not say, will you have this? That is, good generous people, if they design to give any thing, must not ask whether they will have it, but give without asking.

Prov. Mádre y hija visten una camisa: The mother and the daughter wear the same shift. That is, they are both alike, they have both the same qualities, signified by the shift that is next them; or, as we say, Like mother, like daughter; like master, like man.

Prov. Mádre no viste, padre no tuviste, diablo te biziste: You saw no mother, you had no father, and you became a devil. A saying of bastards, who sometimes never see their mothers, being put out to nurse as soon as born, to save reputation, and never know their father, who is ashamed to own them; and therefore having no parents to breed them up, their education is lewd, and they become devils.

Prov. Mádre ardida hace hija tullida: A busy mother makes a lame daughter. When a mother does every thing, and lets her daughter sit idle, she makes her fit for nothing, which is as bad as being lame. The same is said of masters who keep idle servants, and do their business themselves; and of masters, who ask their scholars questions, and answer themselves.

Prov. Mádre piadosa cria hija merdosa: A tender mother breeds a nasty daughter. Because when she is an infant, she will not wash and clean her for fear she should cry; and when grown up, she will not suffer her to put her hand to any thing; and by that means she grows lazy, and consequently a slut.

Prov. Quién tiene madre, muírase tarde: May he who has a mother be long before he loses her. Because mothers are most tender in their affections, and always studying their childrens good, therefore the proverb wishes them long life for the benefit of their children.

Prov. Traségalla, porque no sepa a la madre: Rack her off, that she may not taste of the mother. This advice one young man gave to another, who had complained to him that his wife had many ill habits which she had learned of her mother. The husband understood it not, till one day he saw him rack off his wines, and turn them out of one cask into another, still leaving the lees behind; when perceiving his meaning, he went home, and removed his house far from his wife's mother and acquaintance, and then found he could manage her; and she soon forgot all the ill her mother and others taught her. It is good advice in general to remove all youth from that company that teaches them any ill.

Prov. Vase mi madre, malaya quien mas bilare, o puta sea quien mas bilare: My mother is going, a curse on her that will spin any longer, or, may she be a whore who spins any longer. This they say to such as will not work or mind business any longer than there are eyes over them.

Prov. Quién madre tiene en villa, siete véces se amortice cada día: She that has a mother in the town swoons away seven times a day. This they say of lazy wenches, who are put out to service, and pretend sickness and fainting fits, that their mothers may take them home; and of impertinent young wives, who, when their husbands displease them, pretend indisposition, that their mothers may be sent for.

Prov. Quién no tiene madre, no tiene quien le lave, o le alabe: He who has no mother has no body to wash him or praise him. This is only to denote the great tenderness of mothers, for no body does so praise or serve children as good mothers do.

MADRECILLA, vid. Madrezilla.

MADRESE-LVA, the plant woodbine or honeysuckle.

MADREZILLA,

MADREZILLA, a little mother.

MADRID, the residence of the court of Spain, never made a city, but continues a market town, situated on the banks of the river Mancanires, in the kingdom of Castile, and heart of Spain, its situation delightful, and the country fruitful. It contains 400 streets, 14 squares, 18 parishes, 57 monasteries of men and women, 22 hospitals, that which is called the general seldom entertaining less than 500 sick persons, and sometimes 1000. At one end of it is a noble palace of the king's, and at the other end another of later fabric. The town sends deputies to the cortes, and was antiently called Nantina Carpentaria, or Carpentarium.

MADRIGALDOS, so they call men that are expert and secret in their affairs.

MADRIGAL, a madrigal or pastoral song; the Spanish have each stanza consisting of three staves. Morley, p. 180, says, a madrigal is a kind of music made upon songs and sonnets, and is next to the motet the most artificial, and to men of understanding the most delightful. Also a sort of very irregular verses.

MADRIGAL, a town in Old Castile in Spain, 4 leagues from Medina del Campo, seated in a fruitful valley, famous for rich wine. The town wall'd, yet has not above 200 houses, 2 parishes, 1 monastery of friars, 1 of nuns, and a great hospital.

MADRIGAL, a town in the province of Popayan in South America, by the Indians called Chapanchica, 35 leagues to the south of the city Popayan. The country is rugged and stony, but produces Indian wheat thrice a year. There are some gold mines in the country.

MADRIGUEIRA, a coney-borough; met. a cellar, or such place where many ordinary people are.

MADRINA, a godmother.

Madrina de la boda, one of the witnesses at a wedding that attends the bride.

Prov. Al madrina, que ésto yo me lo sabía: Talk of something else, bride-woman, for I knew that before. The bride-woman pretending to instruct a young bride, who was well skilled in those affairs, she made this answer; and it is apply'd to those who pretend to instruct others better knowing than themselves.

MADRIZ, the matrix, the womb.

MAESTRADA'TA, a notary, or rather a recorder.

Maestre de campo, a colonel of foot. Maestre de campo, in the Spanish army was formerly, as Herera informs us, the next person to the captain-general, and almost equal in power to him, by which he should be lieutenant-general; but by the account he gives of his marking out incampments, and doing other such things, he seems rather to have been a major-general. However it must be observed, that the number and names of commanders have been much altered in armies since that author wrote; and as he tells us, the colonels being called Maestres de campo, the title of maestre de campo general is therefore given to him that was before only maestre de campo, to distinguish him from colonels.

Maestre escuela, a schoolmaster; a dignity in the church.

Maestre coral, a juggler.

Maestre sala, a gentleman sewer.

MAESTRIA, maitership.

MAGUE'R, Obf. albeit, altho'.

MAGUE'Y is the tree of wonders, for it yields water, wine, oyl, vinegar, honey, a sort of must like that of new wine boiled, thread and needles, besides many other things. It is therefore much valued in New Spain, and grows wild, and is also cultivated. The leaves of it are broad and coarse, ending in a sharp strong point, which serves either for a pin, or to sew with, and this is the needle; and from the leaf they draw out threads, which are its fibres. The body or trunk of the tree being large, when it is young and tender, they cut an hollow in it, to which the sap or moisture rises from the root, and this they drink instead of water, being cool and sweet. This liquor boiled is like wine; letting it fowre, it serves for vinegar; being boiled to a consistence, it is honey; and half-boiled, it is like the must above-mention'd, well tasted, and wholesome, and in my opinion better than that which is made of grapes. So that according as they boil it, there come from it several sorts of liquors; and the quantity the tree yields is great, as several quarts every day for some time. The wood of this tree is spongy, and serves to keep fire a long time, like the match used by soldiers. F. Jos. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. l. 4. c. 23. p. 254.

MAGUJO, a tool they use on ship-board to drive the old caulking in the seams of the ship.

MA'MA, a dug, a pap, a teat; or, as children say mammy to their mother. Lat. mamma.

MAMACÓNAS, a sort of heathen nuns, like the Roman Vestal virgins, that serv'd in the same nature in Peru, before the conquest by the Spaniards.

MAMA'NTE, a sucking babe. The word obsolete, and scarce used but in one expression; as,

No quedara mamante ni piante, there shall not be left so much as a chicken, or a sucking babe. To signify, that all living creatures shall be destroy'd.

MAMANTONES, young sucking lambs or kids that have never graz'd.

MAMA'R, to suck. From mamma, a teat.

MAMARRA'CHO, a scurvy ugly figure, a base piece of painting, an ill made image, a maulkin; also a jack-pudding.

MAMELÚCO, a mameluke; they were originally slaves, who took up arms, and tyranniz'd in Egypt for many years, choosing a sultan among themselves. Whence the Portuguese in Brazil gave this name to those that were begot by them on Indian women, who for many years committed the most barbarous villanies that ever were heard of, as may be seen in del Techo's history of Paraguay.

MAME'Y, a sort of fruit in the West Indies, bigger than a large peach, with one or two stones in it, and the pulp harder than that of a peach. Some are sweet, others somewhat tart; the rind is hard; they are pleasant to eat, and make a good preserve, which looks like quince. They grow in the islands; the tree is large, handsome, and bears a good head. Acost. hist. W. Ind. p. 256.

MAMOEIRO, a tree in Brazil, of which there is male and female. The male bears no fruit, but only flowers; the female bears fruit, and no flower; but unless the male be planted near, she bears not. This female grows about two foot thick and nine in height before it bears, and then the top appears cover'd with fruit, growing close, clinging one to the other, near nine foot in height. This fruit is round, and as big as a small gourd; the pulp of it when ripe is yellowish, which the Indians eat to purge them. It has many seeds as big as pease, black and shining; the leaves grow out among the fruit on long stalks, and are like those of the plane.

M A N

MAN, is used joined with other words for máno, an hand.

MANA', manna, which the Israelites fed on in the desert.

Maná, the kind, easy, and medicinal manna found in the province of Usbeck in Persia, and thence sent to Ormuz, and all over India. There are five sorts of it in those parts. One white, small, in grains like comfits, and sweet as honey; and this, some say, is a dew that falls on those trees, whence they gather it, and they keep it in glass vessels well stopp'd from the air; others say, it is a gum coming from the same tree. Another sort, they say, grows on thistles, whence they draw it, beating them with staves. It is of a ruddy colour, and of the bigness of a coriander-seed. This, some think to be the fruit, others, the gum of those thistles; and the Persians reckon it better and wholesomer than the other. The third sort is in bigger pieces, and mix'd with some leaves, white, and like the manna of Calabria; this most used, and dearest. Another sort is sold about India, liquid, in skins and pots, like white honey, but soon decays. All these purge with ease, and without danger. Another sort in bits, bigger than that of Calabria, and not white, is sold at Ormuz, and in several parts of India. This purges more violently, and therefore the common sort reckon it the better, as also because it is cheaper; but this is a composition. It is so safe a medicine, that it is given to children and women with child. Christ. Acoft. nat. hist. E. Ind.

MA'NA, is also an abbreviation of ermana, sister.

MA'NA, the name of a river in the province of Oronoko in South America.

Ir de manga, or hacer un negocio de manga, to take bribes.

Aunque me cortaron las faldas me dexaron las mangas, tho' they have cut off my skirts, they left me the sleeves. So said a great man who had a considerable part of his estate taken from him, but was still well to pass. And it is used upon occasion of such losses.

Prov. Buenas son mangas después de Pascua: Sleeves are good after Easter. This they say when any thing that has been long expected or desir'd comes late, or a thing out of season. For tho' the weather grows warm after Easter, and people may leave off cloaths, yet if a pair of sleeves be then given, they are not to be refus'd, for a good thing never comes too late.

Prov. Entrar por la manga, y salir por el cabecón: To go in at the sleeve and come out at the neck. Taken from the ancient custom of adopting a son in Spain, when she that was to be the mother, put the adopted through the sleeve of a wide smock, and so pass'd his head out of the neck or bosom of it. Thence metaphorically apply'd to signify, one that being admitted to favour, gains an entire ascendant over the person. Or one, that if you give him an inch, takes an ell.

MA'NGO, an haft, helve, or handle.

MA'NGO, the mango, well known in England, brought over in pickle, and an excellent sauce. The tree that bears it is large, and thick of boughs, the fruit commonly bigger than a goose egg; but in some parts of India there are of them that weigh above two pounds. Some of them are green, some with a mixture of red, and some yellow, but all from the same tree. This fruit is very pleasant to the taste and smell, and much better than the quince. It is eaten several ways, and all of them good; as also preserv'd, and pickled, opening it, and filling the shell with garlick, mustard, salt and oil, and then putting it into vinegar. It is cold and moist. Before it is quite ripe this fruit is of a very harsh taste, but ripe, very sweet and pleasant. The kernel in its stone, eaten raw, is bitter, but good to kill worms, and against the flux; roasted, it tastes like an acorn. There are some mangos without any stone. There is a sort of wild mangos which are such rank poison, that there is no antidote yet known against them. Christ. Acoft. nat. hist. E. Ind.

MARAÑON, one of the districts or captainships into which the vast province of Brazil in South America is divided, taking its name from a bay of that name on its coast, and a small island in it, bearing the same name; tho' some will give this name to a river there, but it belongs only to the island, bay and district.

MARAVEDI, a word used in reckoning money, and yet it signifies no particular coin, nor has there been any piece called a maravedi. They have been taken for several values in several ages. In the year 1401, it appears that a maravedi was the third part of a royal. Under king Alonso the XIth, a maravedi was worth seventeen times as much as now. Under king Henry II. ten times the value that now. Under king Henry III. five times; and under king John II. two maravedies and an half of these now. The word is suppos'd to be Arabick, corruptly from Almoravides, a powerful family of Moors that govern'd Spain, cutting off the al. So far Covarrubias. At present four maravedies make a quarto, and 8 quartos a royal brass; so that it is the 32d part of a groat, or half a farthing.

Prov. Do el maravedi se dexa ballar, ótro debes allí buscar: Where you find a maravedi, there you must seek for another, that is, repeat that thing which you have once found to turn to account. Where something is got, look for it again.

MARIDILLO, a little husband, or a pitiful fellow of an husband; also a little pan to keep fire in; so called, because it keeps the women warm.

Prov. Séa maridillo, si quiera de lo dillo, or sea sapillo: Be it but an husband, tho' he be but of dirt, or tho' he be a toad. Said to women who so they are marry'd, care not what their husband is.

MARIDO, an husband. Lat. maritus.

Prov. Marido, no creáys lo que viéredes, sino lo que yo os dixere: Husband, don't believe what you see, but what I tell you. This is generally apply'd to those who would persuade others out of their knowledge, and what they actually see. As an ill woman, who, though her husband discovers her ill courses, would not have him believe his own eyes, but give credit to her insinuations.

Prov. Por sí, o por no marido señór, ponéos la capilla: Whether it be so or no, husband, pull on your hood. An husband told his wife that there was a new law that every cuckold should wear a hood to hide his horns, under severe penalties, and therefore desir'd to know whether he had any occasion to wear one. The wife seem'd very angry at the question, and, as he repeated it, still chid him for his mistrust; but as he was going out, for fear of the penalty, she call'd after him, bidding him, whether he was so or no, to put on his hood. This is advice, in doubtful cases, ever to take that course which is safest.

Prov. Pensé que no tenía marido, y comine la olla: I thought I had no husband, and I eat up the meat. They say, a country-woman having dress'd the meat for her husband that was at work, because he stay'd later than ordinary, fell to and eat it up. He coming when she had done, and asking her what she meant, she answer'd, she thought she had no husband, and eat up the meat. This is apply'd to all that commit great faults, and then make foolish excuses, saying, I thought or I did not think, and therefore we say, Thought lay a-bed and beslitt himself.

Prov. Por mas que me digádes, mi marido es el pastor: Say what you will the shepherd is my husband. A good woman, wife to a shepherd, heard her neighbours talk ill of all shepherds, and call'd her, by way of contempt, the shepherd's wife, and she not valuing their ill tongues, still answer'd, Say what you will the shepherd is my husband. This shows, that whatsoever ill tongues can say, no wife should be ashamed of her husband, nor no man of his profession, and that nothing thing can divide those whom a faithful love has united.

Prov. Mi marido va a la mar clérlos mirles a buscar: My husband goes to sea to seek clérks mirlos; a fram'd word to signify nothing, or what is nothing to the purpose. Apply'd to those who live idle, and range about from place to place to bring home nothing but idle stories and lies.

Prov. Al marido malo cegallo, con las gallinas de par del gallo: Blind a bad husband with the hens that run with the cock. Hens or pullets signify good feeding; and therefore a woman is advised, if she has a bad husband, to make so much of him, and be so kind, that he may see no faults, and that will make him good. Or in another sense, If the wife is false to her husband, she is advised to be very loving to him, that he may not discover her business.

Prov. Quién no muda marido, no méndra vestido: She that does not change husbands, does not improve in cloaths. A saying of women, who having been ill used by their first husbands, live well with a second. It is also used by lewd women, who call their gallants husbands, and changing them often, get variety of garments. Apply'd in another sense to those who thrive by removing from one place to another, or leaving an employment for a better.

Prov. Prometen marido, y quitan vestido: They promise an husband, and take away cloaths. A maid was taken into service upon promise to marry her after such a term as was agreed on, which, when expired, instead of finding her an husband, they took away some of the cloaths they had given her; whereupon she utters this proverb, which is apply'd to all those who promise mighty favours, and at the same time take something from those they were to assist.

Prov. Marido tras del lar, mal de bijar: An husband by the fire-side is as bad as a pain in the side. That is, It is a great affliction to a wife to see her husband sitting in the chimney-corner, when he should be abroad following his business, and providing for his family.

Prov. Así es el marido sin hécho, como casa sin técho: An husband without action is like an house without a roof. By action is meant the conjugal duty, or paying the marriage debt; for if that be not perform'd, the end of matrimony fails, even as an house is of no use that has no roof.

Prov. Al tu marido o esposo muéstrate, mas no del todo: Show your self to your husband or spouse, but not altogether. That is, be not coy to your husband, or too precise, but at the same time do not forget modesty.

Prov. Comé marido pan y cebolla, que porqué séys ruyn no os pongo olla: Husband, eat bread and onion; for I don't hang on the pot, because you are a base fellow. This, they say, a country woman used to say to her husband, providing no better for him to eat, because he did not answer her expectation. And in these terms an husband upbraids his wife, when he finds she does not take care to have his meat dress'd, whilst he is abroad about his business.

Prov. Andando y hablando marido a la horca: Walking and talking on, husband, to the gallows. They say, a woman walking by her husband as he was going to the gallows to be hang'd, he talk'd to her by the way, and sometimes flood to inculcate something to her. The good woman, who had a mind to be rid of him, every time he stopp'd, used the words of this proverb, meaning, that he might talk and walk on to the gallows. It is applied to any that with another dead, or hasten him on to his ruin.

Prov. Al marido sirvelo como a señor, y guárdate del cómo de un traydor: Serve your husband as your lord, and be as cautious of him as you would be of a traitor. That is, honour and obey your husband as you are enjoin'd in matrimony, and at the same time be as cautious of offending him, as if he were the most dangerous traitor.

Prov. A la que su marido en-cornuda, Señor, y tu le ayuda: Lord, do you help her that cuckolds her husband. It does not mean, that God should help her in her wickedness, but that God would protect her life, which is in such imminent danger; it being a thing too frequent in Spain for husbands to kill their wives when they take them in adultery.

Prov. El marido ántes con un ojo, que con un hijo: An husband rather with one eye, than with a son. It is advice to women rather to choose an husband that has but one eye, than the completest man that has a son already.

Prov. Esperando marido caballero, dánme las tetas abaxo del pecho: Waiting for a gentleman for an husband, my breasts hang below my stomach. The complaint of a woman, who looking for an husband above her, was grown old, signified by her breasts hanging down. A misfortune we see often enough among those who soar too high, and because they cannot get what is above them, pretend they will not marry. It is apply'd to all that slip the time of providing for themselves according to their rank, by aspiring to those things that are above them.

Prov. La que mal marido tiene en el tocado se le parece: She that has an ill husband shows it in her dress. Because generally women that have ill husbands live discontented, and do not care to take the pains to dress themselves.

Prov. Marido cornudo siles. Mejor es que inchár óres: Husband, you are a cuckold. It is better than filling of skins. A poor fellow that dress'd hogskins to carry wine in, having an handsome wife, neglected his trade, and she got their living as she could, which he consented to; whereupon she took the freedom to tell him he was a cuckold, and he answers, It is better be a cuckold, and live at ease, than to work at such a poor trade. Applied to such men as value not honour or conscience, so they live idly.

Prov. Marido y muger, compañía sin bien: Husband and wife unhappy company. This, they say, is so if they have no children nor servants; because children are the end of matrimony, and if they have no servants they must be forced to serve themselves, which sometimes causes uneasiness. But proverbs are not always infallible; for many live happier without servants than some that have many, and children do not always prove a blessing.

Prov. Llevad vos marido la arteña, &c. Vid. Arteña.

Prov. He aquí marido como nos perdemos, tu para poco, y yo para mentos: Thus it is we are ruin'd, husband, because you are good for little, and I for less. Said when two people meet who are fit for no business, and all things go to rack between them.

The fruit of it grows in clusters like grapes, but a yard and an half in length; they are first green, then red, and at last of a dark purple. The Indians take the tender shoots of this tree, and cutting them very small, boil them in water to the consistence of a syrup, which heals dangerous wounds, and stops their bleeding. The seeds boiled in the same manner, have the same virtue.

MARIPOSA, a butterfly.

MARIQUITAS, a nation of Indians of the race of the Tapugas, on the coast of Brazil, betwixt Pernambuco and the bay of Todos os Santos. Men and women follow the wars alike. MARITACA'CA, a beast in the province of Brazil in South America, about the bigness of a cat, in shape like a ferret. On its back there is a perfect cross made by two streaks, the one white, the other brown. It feeds on birds and their eggs, and is so greedy of ambergreese, that it often walks along the sea-shore in the night to seek it. This beast is much dreaded, not for any hurt it does with either teeth or claws, but because of its wonderful stink, which is so hurtful and venomous, that it pierces stones and trees, and kills men and beasts. This stink lasts fifteen or twenty days, and sometimes longer, so that the Indians are forced to forsake their villages when this beast comes too near them.

MA'YZ, Indian wheat to make bread of, is the only sort of grain found in the West-Indies: it grows on a strong reed, with large grains, and sometimes two ears on a reed, on one of which 700 grains of wheat have been told. They sow it grain by grain, and not scattering, as we do our wheat, and it requires a hot and moist soil. There are two sorts of it, one large and substantial, the other small and dry, which they call morache. The leaves of it and the reed are very good food for cattle, green; and dry, it serves as well as straw. The grain is better for beasts than barley, but they must drink before they eat it; for if they drink after, it swells, and gives them the gripes. The Indians eat it hot boiled, and call it mote, and sometimes roasted. There is a sort of it large and round, which the Spaniards eat toasted; they also grind it, and make cakes, which they eat hot, and these in some places they call arepas; they also make bread to keep, and sweet cakes of it. The Indians make drink of it, as we do of barley; this they call in Peru, agua, and in most other parts chicha, which is very strong, and makes them drunk, for which reason it is prohibited. They have also a way of extracting an oil from it, which is good, and serves instead of butter, or oil of olives. Jos. da Acost. nat. hist. of the West Indies, l. 4. c. 16. p. 236.

MEDINA, the name of several towns in Spain, signifying in Arabick a chief city or metropolis.

MEDINA CELI, a town in the kingdom of Old Castile in Spain, 4 leagues from Siguénça, seated on a high hill, not far from the source of the river Xalon, it has strong antient walls, and a castle of the same sort; as also a noble palace for its dukes; its territory abounds in game, all sorts of cattle, fowl and corn. Its inhabitants are not above 300, under one collegiate parish with a miter'd abbot. It was formerly called Ecclesta, Augustobriga, Mediolum, and Secontia Vetus. It stands on a hill near the river Xalon, 31 leagues north east of Madrid, and 34 south-west from Zaragoza. King Henry the second of Castile made it an earldom and a dukedom by Ferdinand and Isabel, king and queen of Castile and Aragon. Both these titles came successively to the most illustrious family of la Cerda, in whom the dukedom still continues. These dukes are descended from Ferdinand, son and rightful heir to Alonso the Xth, king of Castile, but unjustly put by his right by his uncle Sancho the IVth, who usurp'd the crown and left it to his heirs: Prince Ferdinand took the name of la Cerda from some bristly hair he had on his breast, cerdas in Spanish signifying bristles. Elizabeth de la Cerda, heiress of this noble family, was marry'd to Moses Bernard, earl of Bearne and Faux, from whom the present dukes of Medinaceli are descended. His estate is suitable to his nobility, being valu'd at near 80,000 pounds per annum; his arms quarterly, the first and fourth party per pale of Castile and Leon, the second and third, of France.

MEDINA DE LAS TORRES, a small town in the kingdom of New Castile in Spain, of which I can no where find any further account.

MEDINA DEL CAMPO, a town in the kingdom of Castile in Spain, eight leagues from Valladolid, on the banks of the river Zapardiel, formerly the place of residence of some kings, seated in a muddy soil, and subject to clouds and fogs, which is the reason they say of it, It has neither sky nor ground; yet its territory is fruitful. Formerly it contain'd 14000 inhabitants, at present about 1800 houses, 14 parishes, 9 monasteries of friars, 6 of nuns, and 4 hospitals.

MEDINA DEL POMA'R, a small town in Old Castile in Spain, on the mountains of Burgos.

MEDINA SIDONIA, a town in Andalusia in Spain, formerly called Affindum and Affindonia, seated on a hill 9 miles east of Cádiz, and 25 west of Malaga. King John II. of Castile erected it into a dukedom in the year 1445, conferring that title on D. John Alonso de Guzman III. earl of Niebla, in whose issue it continues to this time. The family of Guzman is of antient and great nobility. Some will have it to be descended from Gundemar, king of the Goths, other from Gurban, king of Britany in France; and indeed its antiquity is singular; but this we have for certain, that it descends lineally from the famous Alonso Perez de Guzman, who about the year 1292, defended Tarifa with the utmost bravery against the Moors; who because he would not surrender, murder'd his son before his face, for which he had the surname of el Bueno, or the good given him, which his issue still keep up. His grandson was created earl of Niebla by king Henry II. of Castile, and the earl's grandson, duke of Medina Sidonia, by king John II. Their estate is suitable to their nobility, being valu'd at 60000 pounds per annum; their arms, parti per saltier, in chief and base azure, a kettle checkie, Or, and sanguine; with three snakes sticking out on each side the handle; the dexter and sinister sides argent, with five black spots of ermin; the whole within an orle of Castile and Leon. The situation of the town is on a steep hill, very strong by nature; but the territory about it is for the most part rich pasture. The inhabitants amount to about 1500, 2 parishes, 4 monasteries of friars, and 1 of nuns.

MEDINA DE RIO SE'CO, a city in the kingdom of Leon in Spain, seated in a large plain, hemm'd in with mountains. It is a rich and well serv'd city. The fields about it are very rich pasture, besides corn fields and vineyards. Its inhabitants are above 2000, many of quality. There are in it three parishes, 3 monasteries of friars, 2 of nuns, 3 great hospitals, and 16 chapels. A good castle commands it. King Philip IV. made it a city an. 1632. The antient name of it was Forum Egurrorum, and since Methymna Sicca. It is a dukedom in the noble family of Henriquez. Of which see more verb. Almirante de Castilla.

Poner los medios como si no huviera Dios, y acudir a Dios como si no huviera medios: To use means as if there were no God, and have recourse to God as if there were no means. Good advice for us to use all human means and industry in our worldly affairs, as if they depended wholly upon us, without the help of God, yet at the same time to have recourse to God for his assistance, as if we had no means to use. In short, to use industry, and apply to God at the same time.

MÓÇA, a young maid, a wench, a maid servant.

Prov. Ni móça fêa, ni vieja hermosa: No young woman is ugly, nor no old one handsome. A saying of young fellows that love all young women.

Prov. Móça que con vieja casa, trátase como anciana: A young woman that marries an old man must behave herself like an old woman. Because if she does not live retiredly and soberly, she will lose her reputation, and the husband will grow jealous.

Prov. Peor es la móça de casar, que de criar: It is harder to marry a young woman, than to breed her up. That is, there is more difficulty in marrying her well, than in her education.

Prov. A la móça mala la campana la llama; y a la mala, mala; ni campana, ni nada: The bell calls a bad wench; but if she is very bad, neither the bell nor any thing else. That is, when a maid begins to be bad, she may be reclaimed by admonition, or calling upon; but if she is harden'd in ill, nothing then will mend her. Others say thus:

Prov. A la móça mala la campana la llama, y a la buena en casa la halla: The bell calls a bad maid, but finds the good one at home. That is, when we must ring bells to fetch home wild wenches, sober ones are at home about their affairs.

Prov. De móça adivina, y de mugén latina: From a wench that has the spirit of divination, and from a woman that talks Latin, good Lord deliver us. Because they are full of tongue and impertinence.

Prov. A la móça con el móco, y al móço con el bóço: A girl must be marry'd before she can wipe her nose, and a lad as soon as the down grows upon his face. For fear they should be debauch'd.

Prov. Bién parece la móça lozana cabe la barba cana: A buxom young woman looks well by a grey beard. Young maids ought to be in sober, grave company, to keep them in awe.

Prov. No me agrada nada móça con leche, y bota con agua: I do not at all like a young maid that has milk in her breasts, nor a leather bottle with water in it. The bottle should have only wine, and a maid with milk is bad.

Prov. O llueve, o apedrea, o nuestra móça se mea: It either rains or hails, or our maid pisses. A roguish saying.

Prov. Guarte móça de promesa de hombre que como cangrejo corre: Take heed, girl, of the promise of a man that runs like a crab. It has a double meaning. That is, either of a bandy-legged man that cannot go; or else, take heed of the promises of all men, because they are apt to go back from them, as the crab goes backward.

Prov. La móça y la parra no se veen hasta alçarse la falda: A wench and a vine are not seen till you take up their coats. By the coats of the vine is meant, you cannot see what is at the stock till you put by the leaves; the other needs no explaining.

Prov. La móça de la villa, la casa fúzia, la puerta barrida: The town-maid has a dirty house, and the door swept clean. Because those that are born in great towns have much acquaintance and are gossips; and the house be dirty, will sweep the street-door, to gaze about and talk with their companions.

Prov. La móça en el texado, no anda a buen paso: The maid upon the top of of the house, or the tiles, is going on no good errand, or is not very safe. For in plain terms she may break her neck; but, as is meant, she has no good design, for it is not likely she can have any good business there.

Prov. Mas tira moça que faga: A wench draws more than a rope. We say, a woman draws more than a yoke of oxen.

MÚDAS, vid. Múda.
MUDECER, vid. Enmudecer.
MUE'JARES, or Mudéxares, Moors that were subject to the Christians, and liv'd among them, by which means they came to be converted, and still kept their name. In Barbary the infidels give this name to the Moors that went over from the kingdom of Granada and their off-spring. In the kingdom of Fez they call the same people Elches.

MUDÍN, an old measure containing about a quarter of a peck.

MÚDO, dumb. Lat. mutus.

M U E

MUE'BLE, moveable.
MUE'BLES, goods, moveables.
Prov. Al mueble sin raíz, presto se le quiebra la cerviz : A moveable without a root soon breaks its neck. That is, money or goods without an estate real, or some way to improve them, are not secure or lasting.
MUE'CA, a scoff.
MUE'LA, a millstone, a grindstone.
MUE'LA, one of the teeth called the grinders. For in Spanish the teeth are distinguished by several names, these grinders called muélas, as is said. The four foremost above and below they call diéntes, or teeth, from the Latin dentes ; and the four that part these from the grinders, that is, one on each side in the upper and lower jaw, colmillos, that is, tusks.

Muêla cordal, an eye-tooth.

Muêla de mûno, an hand-mill.

Muêlas de gallo, cocks grinders. So they call a man that has no teeth.

Prov. A quîen duele la muêla, que la éche suêra ; Let him that has the tooth-ach pull it out. That is, let every man bear the inconveniences which are for his own advantage.

Prov. Entre dos muêlas molares, or cordales, nunca metas tus pulgares : Never put your thumbs betwixt two grinders.

Prov. Pedír muêlas al gâllo : To ask the cock for teeth. Like milking a bull.

MUE'LE, Muêlo, vid. Moler.

MUE'LE, Adject. soft. Lat. mollis.

MUE'LLE, a mole built in the sea to make an harbour, or defend it from being choak'd up by the sand, or to secure it from any particular wind. Lat. moles.

MUE'RMO, a cold in any beast, which makes them breathe hard and snort ; the snuffling or snorting of a dog.

MUERMOSO, troubled with a cold, snuffling, or snorting.

MUE'RTE, death. Lat. mors.

Prov. Muérte de suêgra dolor de codo, que duele mucho y dura poco : The death of a mother-in-law, that is, the wife's or the husband's mother, is like the pain of an elbow, which is very sharp, and lasts little. Because in Spain they have no good conceit of those mothers by affinity, and therefore they say it looks like a great pain, but is soon over.

Prov. A la muérte de mi marido, poca cera y mucho pavilo : At my husband's death, little wax and much snuff. Alluding to the wax-lights they carry at funerals. The saying of a woman that would be rid of her husband at the cheapest rate, allowing the worst of every thing for his funeral.

Prov. Por muérte de hijos no se despara la casa : The house is not unfurnished for the death of children. Because whilst the father and mother live, they commonly keep house, tho' children die.

Prov. A la muérte no ay cosa fuérte : Nothing is strong against death. Or, there is no remedy against death.

Prov. Quién da lo que tiene antes de la muérte, meréce que le den con un mazo en la frente : He who gives away what he has before death, deserves to be knock'd on the head with a mallet. That is, he is not fit to live, since we see so many who have come to want by giving what they had to their own children, who have barbarously forsaken them.

Prov. Guây de la muérte, que no toma presente : Alas for death, which rakes no present. That is, will not be bribed.

Prov. Mas vale dexár en la muérte al enemigo, que pedír en la vida al amigo : It is better at one's death to leave to an enemy, than in one's life to ask of a friend.

Prov. En la muérte del áfno no pierde nada el lobo : The wolf is no loser by the ass's death. Because commonly the wolves eat him. Sharpers are commonly the better for the death of foolish misers, who have labour'd hard all their life-time to acquire wealth.

MUE'RTÓ, dead. Lat. mortuus.

Prov. Quién con muértos se sueña con vivos se halla : He who dreams of the dead, finds himself among the living. To signify, that there is no minding dreams, for when a man awakes he finds nothing of them.

MUE'SCA, a notch, a dent, a scotch in any thing. Arab.

M U F

MÚFLA, a concave thing like half a bowl, which serves to cover the refiner's furnace, having an hollow tunnel or neck to it, through which the crucibles are put down into the furnace to essay silver or gold.

MUFLIR, in cant, to eat.

M U G

MUGER, a woman. Lat. mulier.

Mugér de su casa, a good housewife.

Mugér de gusto, a lady of pleasure.

Mugér de punto, a woman that stands upon her honour.

Tomar la mugér en cueros, to take a woman naked. We say, to take her in her smock.

Prov. A la mugér baylar, y al asno rebuznar, el diáblo se lo devió de mostrar: It was surely the devil taught woman to dance, and the ass to bray. Because the consequences of dancing are often so scandalous, and an ass's braying so odious.

Prov. De tu mugér y de tu amigo experto, no creas sino lo que supieres de cierto: Do not believe any thing of your wife, and of a try'd friend, but what you are sure of. Good advice not to credit idle reports, or vile whisperers, who endeavour to sow discord between friends and married people.

Prov. A la mugér casta, Dios le basta: God is sufficient for a chaste woman. Other women put their confidence in their friends, or their wealth, or other worldly dependances, but a chaste virtuous woman may put her trust in God, who will provide for and reward her. An encouragement to good women, who are destitute of worldly helps.

Prov. Al que tiene mugér hermosa, o castillo en frontera, o viña en carrera, nunca le falta guerra: He that has a beautiful wife, or a castle on the frontiers, or a vineyard on the road, is never without war. That is, has always quarrels. The beautiful wife the proverb supposes will be sought after by others, which will make her husband jealous, and then quarrels ensue: A castle on frontiers is always exposed to the enemy; and a vineyard by the highway is subject to be pull'd by all that pass, which the owner cannot bear patiently.

Prov. A la mugér mala poco le aprovecha guanda: It is to little purpose to watch a wicked woman. This proverb serves all men: For if they have good wives, there is no need of watching them; and if they are bad, the devil will instruct them how to be too hard for their husbands.

Prov. Aunque con tu mugér tengas barajas, no metas en tu casa pajas: Tho' you quarrel with your wife, do not bring straw unto your house. That is, do not keep servants that carry tales backwards and forwards, or admit any others to be any ways concerned between you; for that is like bringing straw into the house, which will soon take fire, and raise a conflagration that cannot be quenched.

Prov. Al que yo bien quiera, la mugér se le muera, la mala que no la buena: The man that I love may his wife dye, the bad one, but not the good one. A friendly wish that a man may be rid of an ill wife, since there is no way but death to part them.

Prov. Con la mugér y el dinero, no te búrles compañero: Do not jest with a wife and money. It does not mean that a man should not be easy with his wife, so as to jest with her; but that he should not, as some do, utter lewd jests of her abroad, which is below a man of honour, and expose her to contempt: And in another sense, that none should presume to jest upon another man's wife; but that a wife and money ought both to be chearily kept; for, as we say, it is ill jesting with edg'd tools.

Prov. A la mugér y a la gallina tuércele el cuello, y darte ha la vida: Wring your wife's and your fowl's neck, and they will give you life. That is, wring the neck of your fowl, which eaten, is good nourishment; and correct your wife if she deserves it, which will make you easy, and that will give you life; for good nourishment and living easy make a man live long.

Prov. A la mugér y a la picáca, lo que viéres en la plaza: To a woman and a magpie, what you see in the market-place. That is, tell women and magpies nothing but what is publick, or may be so, and do not entrust them with any secrets, lest they reveal them.

Prov. A quien tiene mala mugér ningún bien le puede venir; que bien se pueda desir: He that has a bad wife can have no good befall him that can be call'd good. Because his misfortune is so great in having an ill wife, that no happiness can any way mitigate it, but his greatest prosperity is drowned under his affliction. And therefore follows the same proverb reversed.

Prov. A quien tiene buena mugér, ningún mal le puede venir, que no sea de sufrir: He that has a good wife can have no ill befall him but what is tolerable. Because a good wife alleviates all sorrows, and helps a man to bear a part of them.

Prov. A la mugér ventanera, tuércele el cuello, si la quieres buena: Wring a woman's neck that loves gazing at the windows, if you would make her good for any thing. These proverbs are not to be taken in the literal sense; for it is not here meant that a woman should be murdered for looking out of a window, but that she should be corrected and reprov'd, and broke of it, when she is always gadding and gazing abroad, so as to neglect her household affairs, or give scandal.

Prov. El que no tiene mugér, cada día la mata, mas el que la tiene, bien se la guarda: He that has no wife kills her every day, but he that has, takes good care of her. We see daily men very fierce before they are married, and threaten how they will rule and command their wives, who, when they have them, commonly prove the tamest husbands. We say not unlike it, Maids children and bachelors wives are well governed.

Prov. A la mugér brava dále la soga larga: Give an unruly woman much rope. That is, do not let her go, but give her time to play, as you do with a trout, and then take her up. We say, Give her rope enough, and she'll hang her self. Some take this rope in another sense, and say, that a new-married woman fell a scolding so violently, that her husband was for the present forced to get out of the house till the storm was over. When he came home, the wife being cool, begged his pardon, alledging it was in her nature, and she could not forbear scolding, but her passion was soon over. Then he took a good rope's end, and gave her plentiful correction, which done, he begg'd her pardon, pleading it was his unhappy temper so to do, but when it was over he should be as tame as an ass. This, some say, is giving a wife rope enough.

Prov. A la mugér casada no le des de la bárba: Do not nod your head to a married woman. That is, do not make private signs and tokens to allure her; for when you least think of it, her husband may be in sight, and revenge the wrong that threatens him.

Prov. La mugér en casa, y la pierna quebrada: A woman at home, and her leg leg broken. That is, women ought to keep at home as if their legs were broken, and not to be continually gadding; for nothing is more scandalous, than to see a woman always ranging the streets.

Prov. La muger quinzéna, y el hombre de treinta: The woman at fifteen, the man at thirty. That is, they should marry at those years, and this not on account of the common mistaken notion, that Spanish women will not bear children if they marry late, for then the husbands ought to marry younger, for it is certain they can get children sooner. But the reason is, because when the wife is so young, the husband may mould her to his mind, and teach her to comply with him, and submit to his will, which is not so well done when women are more in years; and the man at thirty is grown more stay'd, riper in judgment, and fitter to rule his family.

Prov. La muger y la falsa a la mano de la lanza: The wife and the fauce on the hand of the lance. That is, place them on your right hand, which is the hand that uses the lance; the wife, to give her due honour; and the fauce, that it may be readier for use.

Prov. La primera muger escoba, y la segunda señora: The first wife a broom, (that is, a drudge) and the second a lady. This proverb signifies, that for the most part he who uses his first wife ill, and lords it over her too much, meets with a second wife of an high spirit, who plays the lady, and keeps him as humble as he did the first wife.

Prov. La muger del brialgo, poca hacienda y gran trenzado: A poor gentleman's wife has but a little estate, and a great roll of hair. That is, poor gentry, tho' they want many conveniences of life, and even cloaths, still endeavour to wear something that may distinguish them from the common sort, which in Spain used formerly to be a great head of hair braided.

Prov. La muger del ciego, para quien se asfeya? For whom does the blind man's wife paint or dress her self up? It cannot be for him who cannot see her ornaments; and therefore the question is very proper, and may serve not only in the case of a blind man, but in an husband's absence, and in other cases allegorically.

Prov. La muger del viejo relumbra como espejo: The old man's wife shines like a looking-glass. That is, old men's young wives are generally passionately beloved by them, who take all the care in the world to please and pamper them, and therefore they thrive, living contented, and shine with gay cloaths and ornaments. This is the true sense; but some enemies to women will have it to denote that old men's young wives dress themselves as fine as they can to please young men.

Prov. La muger del escudero, grande la bolsa, y poco el dinero: The poor squire's wife has a great purse, and little money in it. This is applicable to all things that make much show and are of little value; and not unlike our saying, like shearing of hogs, a great cry, and little wool.

Prov. La muger del viñadero buen otoño, y mal invierno: The keeper of a vineyard's wife has a good autumn and a bad winter. There are men hir'd in Spain to look to the vineyards, which lasts only during the autumn till the vintage, and these are poor fellows, who during that time can maintain their wives with what is allow'd them, and a few grapes they carry home; but when winter comes they are discharged, and then both man and wife in winter must shift for another livelihood.

Prov. La muger del pastor a la noche se compen: The shepherd's wife dresses her self at night. Because her husband is abroad all the day with his flock, and comes home at night, when his wife dresses her self to receive him.

Prov. La muger ante el marido por delante: A cunning woman puts her husband before. That is, whenever she has a mind to refuse any thing, she pleads her husband will be angry, and so still alledging obedience to her husband, can offend no body with her refusal.

Prov. La muger casada en el monte es alvergada: A married woman finds entertainment on a mountain. That is, a virtuous good woman is safe, tho' she be exposed on a mountain; for even there her virtue will protect her, as if she were in the midst of a city.

Prov. La muger compuesta a su marido quita de puerta ajena: A wife that is dress'd draws her husband from another body's door. That is, when a woman keeps her self clean, and decently dress'd, her husband does not run after other women, but is pleas'd with her. Not like some sluts, who think it good housewifery to be nasty, and when reproved for it, say they are married, as if there were no regard to be had to an husband when married; which is the reason that some men, loathing the nastiness they always see at home, cannot endure their house.

Prov. El que no tiene muger muchos ojos ha menester: He who has no wife has need of many eyes. Because he who has a wife has one he can confide in to look to all his household affairs, and take care he be not cheated by servants or others; whereas he who has no wife, has all the care and trouble upon himself.

Prov. La muger maridada no vive descuidada: The married woman must not lead a careless life. It is her business to be watchful not only over her husband's honour, but over all his household affairs, and to take care that he does not suffer through her negligence.

Prov. La muger sea yguál, o menor, si quieres ser señor: Your wife must be your equal, or inferior, if you design to be master. It is advice to men to marry their equals, or else something below their degree, rather than above; because a woman who by birth is much above her husband, will not easily submit to him, but rather endeavour to keep him under as her inferior.

Prov. La muger buena corona es del marido: A good wife is her husband's crown. That is, a good woman crowns all her husband's happiness. It is taken out of scripture, Prov. xii.

Prov. Muéstrame tu muger, dezírte he que marido tiene: Show me your wife, and I'll tell you what an husband she has. It is easy to guess by a woman's garb, countenance, and behaviour, how her husband uses her.

Prov. Muger de cinco sueldos, marido de dos meajas: A wife of five sueldos, an husband of two meajas. A sueldo was an antient piece of money worth 18 maravedis; a meaja was the smallest piece of money in Spain: Therefore when they see the wife very fine, and the husband but poorly clad, they use this proverb. As if we should say, a wife of five pounds, and a twopenny husband.

Prov. Muger no te las cuento, mas doce morcillas hace un puercó: Wife, I don't reckon them to you, but an hog makes 12 puddings. It is the custom of Spain to make so many, neither more or less, when they kill an hog: So this is telling a woman that cannot give a good account of what she is entrusted with, that the husband knows what there ought to be, tho' he will not stand to call her to an account.

Prov. Muger casera, el marido se le muera: The woman that is a good house-keeper, may her husband die. This is not a prayer that a good woman should lose her husband, but only shows, that she is better to live in case the misfortune should befall her, than a gadding idle woman, who, if her husband dies, knows not how to do any thing.

Prov. Ni mugér de otro, ni cox de pótro: Neither another man's wife, nor the kick of a colt. That is, it is as bad to have to do with another man's wife, as to receive a kick of a colt; and the danger is as great in following a married woman, as in following a colt that will kick.

Prov. No es brava la mugér que cabe en casa: She is not an unruly wife, if the house holds her. A man complained to a friend, that his wife was untoward and unruly; the friend inquiring into the matter, found the woman lived very retired, and only reproved her husband for neglecting his business; whereupon he said to the man the words of this proverb, to signify that she was no untoward, turbulent wife, who minded her business, and only chid him because he did not.

Prov. No ay mugér hermosa el día de la boda: No woman is beautiful on the wedding-day. The meaning of it is, that all the women at a wedding are so adorned with rich cloaths, painted and patch'd, that no man can tell what natural perfections they have; and therefore none can be call'd a beauty, but she that appears so without all those helps.

Prov. Para tu mugér empreñar no debes a otro buscar: You must not look for another to get your wife with child. This is plain doctrine enough; but it signifies that men must not, as they say some do, take advice how to get their wives with child, or consult doctors or conjurers for that which is only in themselves. But it is apply'd in any other case, to inform a man that he must mind his own business, and not trust to others.

Prov. La mugér y la uña el hombre la haze garrida: The man makes the wife and vineyard fine. The vineyard must always be carefully pruned and look'd after, or else it will become like a wilderness, all bushes; and so the wife must be cherish'd and taken care of by the husband, which will make her gay and pleasant, and consequently handsome and more taking.

Prov. Quién quisiera mugér hermosa el sábado la escoga: He that will have a beautiful wife must choose her on a Saturday. Because on Saturdays they are generally undress'd, and if they then appear handsome, no doubt but they will be so much more when set off to the best advantage.

Prov. Quién mala mugér cobra, siervo se torna: He who gets a bad wife, becomes a slave. That is, lives in slavery, trouble, confusion, and disorder. Others say, Cierco se torna, he becomes a stag, if he cuckolds him. The words are the same in speaking, and only vary one letter in writing.

Prov. La mugér casera nunca falta de parlara: The woman that is a great house-keeper never fails of being talkative. That is, women who value themselves upon their great housewifery, are always apt to prate more than others desire to hear; for there is no body in this world without some fault; and commonly those that have this good quality never cease tormenting every body with their abilities; so that very often a man had better have a woman that can do nothing, than endure the plague of a wife that is always talking of her housewifery.

Prov. A la mugér y a la mula por el pico la hermosa: A woman and a mule must have their beauty put in at their mouths. That is, nothing contributes more to make them beautiful than good keeping: For as no rich furniture will make a poor horse or mule handsome, so no cloaths, painting, or patching will make a woman beautiful; but good feeding makes her fair and comely, and puts better colour into her cheeks than all the Portuguese dishes or Spanish wool.

Prov. A la mugér primeriza antes se le parece la preñez en el pecho, que en la barriga: The woman that is with child the first time, shews it in her breasts before her belly. Because their breasts are apt to rise and swell before their belly grows big.

Prov. A la mugér loca mas le agrada el pandero que la toca: A mad woman is better pleas'd with a pandero than with her head-cloaths. A pandero is a scurvy instrument in Spain, used by the meaner sort, being only two pieces of parchment stretch'd on a hoop with horse-bells between, which they hold in one hand, and beat with the other, to make an hideous noise to dance to. The proverb signifies, that mad women had rather be dancing and ranting than minding their business. And this is apply'd to any that neglect their duty for their pleasure.

Prov. A la mugér casta pobreza le haze hazer feza: Poverty obliges a chaste woman to do a shameful thing. Want has such a force, that it overcomes all things; and therefore no wonder if it sometimes prevails on women, otherwise chaste, to expose themselves for the necessary supports of life.

Prov. Compuesta no ay mugér fea: When dress'd, no woman is ugly. This only means, that fine feathers make fine birds; and perhaps it signifies, that all women fancy themselves handsome when dress'd, or at least that somebody likes them then. Some faces are so bad, that all the dressing in the world can never make them tolerable, but only virtue, which is the best of ornaments.

Prov. En el andar y en el beber se conoce la mugér: A woman is known by her going and drinking. That is, you may guess at a woman by her going, viz. by her going much or little: If she is given to gadding and rambling, and to drinking, you may be sure she is good for nothing; but if she loves home, and is a friend to sobriety, they are very good tokens.

Prov. La mugér que poco vela, tarde haze lengua tela: The woman that watches little is a long time making a long web. This is apply'd to all persons who would compass great matters with little labour or application.

Prov. La mugér mala, cauta, y no infamada: An ill woman must be cautious, and she'll not be infamous. That is, if women that will be bad would but be cautious of exposing themselves too openly, they might at least save themselves the infamy of a bad name, and would do less harm, in not giving so much scandal to others.

Prov. La mugér y la gallina por andar se pierde ayna: The woman and the hen are lost by gadding. A hen when it once strays from home, is soon lost; and so a woman, when she gives her self to much gadding and company, seldom fails of being lost in her reputation; for few have fortitude enough to withstand the temptations they run themselves into.

Prov. La mugér loca por la lista compra la toca: A hair-brain'd woman buys the head-cloths by the list, that is, By the lace, or little ornament about them, without minding whether they are good or bad. The same may be said of all who suffer themselves to be impos'd upon in the main, by only regarding frivolous Additions, as he who buys an ill house for the sake of a handsome front, a faulty garment for a little little embroidery, an ill book for its good binding, or takes a bad wife for a good portion.

Prov. La mugér algaréra nunca haze larga tela: A scolding or a prating woman never makes a long web, that is, such sort of women are never at leisure to mind their business, their tongues take up all their time, and the work is laid aside to prate.

Prov. La mugér placera dize de todos, y todos della: The woman that haunts the market, has something to say of every body, and every body of her, which is no more, than that a woman, who is always abroad, is ever railing at her neighbours, and finding faults, and consequently they have all enough to say of her.

Prov. La mugér que cria, ni barta ni limpia: A woman that suckles is neither satisfy'd nor clean. Nurses are apt to have good stomachs, and are often hungry, besides they cannot be well dress'd, and are always cleaning the children, which makes them not very clean themselves.

Prov. De mala mugér te guarda, y de la buena no fies nada: Take heed of an ill woman, and trust a good one with nothing. This is a general advice to be cautious of women, to have nothing to do with the bad ones, and not confide too much in good ones.

Prov. La mugér, y el Frayle mal parecen en la calle: Women and friars look ill in the street, that is, they ought not to be seen there any more than is necessary; they ought to live retir'd.

Prov. La mugér vieja, si no sirve de olla, sirve de cobertera: An old woman, if she does not serve for a Pot, serves for a pot-lid, that is, if a woman be too old to be lewd, she will serve to be a bawd.

Prov. La mugér hermosa, o loca, o presumptuosa: A beautiful woman is either mad or haughty. This needs little expounding; it is but too natural for women to be proud and conceited of a little beauty, and very often their pride to swell to such a degree, that makes them mad.

Prov. La mugér y el vidrio siempre estan en peligro: A woman and a glass are always in danger, the glass oft being broken, and the woman oft being deluded by the false oaths and promises of men.

Prov. La mugér, y el vino sacan al hombre de vino: Women and wine put man out of his wits. Little need be said of this, where we daily see the effects of drunkenness, and how many men commit the greatest of follies and extravagances on the account of women.

Prov. La mugér negra trementina en ella: There is turpentine in a black woman. The meaning of it is, that black women are found, healthy and sweet.

Prov. Mugér labradora puta, o cantonera: A needle-woman is either a whore or a thief. This is rather a reflection on those who employ them, than those unfortunate women; for it signifies, that they get so little for their work, that it will not give them bread, and therefore they are forc'd either to be whores or thieves.

Prov. Mugér, viento, y ventura presto se muda: Woman, wind, and fortune soon change; there is no relying on them; for as we see nothing more fickle than the wind, so nothing can be more uncertain than fortune; and women in all countries have the ill Fate to be compar'd to the wind.

Prov. No ruegues a mugér en cama, ni al caballo en el agua: Do not intreat a woman in bed, nor a horse in the water. If you have prevail'd so far as to be in bed with a woman, it is needless then to pray and intreat; and a horse in the water must be kept up with whip and spur, or else perhaps, if you use him gently, he may lie down with you.

Prov. Quando esfuviéres con tu mugér vientre con vientre, no le digas quanto te viniere a la mente: When you are with your wife belly to belly, do not tell her all that comes into your head, be not at that time too open-hearted, so as to discover any secrets you would not reveal at another time; talk of perfections in her, and find faults in others, and so forth.

Prov. Quién a su mugér no honra, a si mismo deshonra: He who does not honour his wife, dishonours himself.

Prov. La mugér y la gallina basta en casa la vecina: A woman and an hen must go as far as their next neighbours, that is, they must not gad far from home.

Prov. La mugér y la pera, la que calla es buena: The silent woman and pear is good. Of the woman it needs no explaining; for the pear it signifies that which is not harsh, or does not make a noise when you cut, or bite it, for such as do are never good.

Prov. Múla que haze bin, y mugér que parla Latín, nunca hizieron buen fin: A mule that cries hin, and a woman that talks Latin, never came to a good end. By the mule that cries hin, is meant a shrill unlucky jade, which is oftentimes knock'd on the head; and a learned woman seldom comes to any good.

Prov. La mula, y la muger por halago, han de hazer el mandado: A mule and a woman are to do what they are bid by soothing, that is, fair means are best to deal with them.

Prov. Múla de alquiler, Dios te guarde de tres, que de dos cierto es: Hackney mule, God keep you from three, for two are certain. A saying at Salamanca, where, when a scholar hires a mule, he generally has a companion to ride behind him, and sometimes two; and therefore the master prays she may be deliver'd from three riders, for he is sure she will have two.

Prov. A la mula con halago, y al caballo con el palo: A mule must be sooth'd, and an horse beaten, because the mules are vicious, and, if beaten, grow resty or mischievous.

Prov. A la mula, freno en gula: A mule must have a bridle at her throat, that is, you must always keep her freight-rein'd.

Prov.

Prov. A la mula roma, y a toro ló-co, no te pares de rostro: Do not stand before a flat-nos'd or a short-nos'd

NIÑETA, a little girl, or the sight of the eye.

NIÑEZ, infancy, childhood.

NÍÑO, an infant, a male child. From the Hebrew nin, a son.

Niño de la piedra, a foundling, a child that has been expos'd by its parents, so called, because in the cathedral church of Toledo, there is a sort of a large half pillar of stone, on which such children are generally left, and there is an hospital to take care of them.

Prov. Ni de niño te ayuda, ni casés con viuda: Do not seek the assistance of a child, nor marry a widow. Because the help or assistance of a child avails little, and is rather an hindrance; and a widow is not so governable as a young maid.

Prov. Al niño su madre castíguelo siempre y hartélo: Let the mother punish, clean, and fill the belly of her child.

That is, the mother had better look to the child than the nurse, punish its faults, take care of its cleanliness, and see it be well fed; and she is to take care to correct, and see it wants for nothing.

Prov. Dizen los niños, en el solejar, lo que oyen a sus padres en el hogar: The children say in the sun what they heard from their parents by the fire side. A warning to parents how they talk of things that should not be known, before their children; because they have memory to remember, and want discretion to keep counsel.

Prov. Esse niño me alaba, que cómo y mamá: Commend me that child which eats and sucks. That is, it will be sound and strong, and thrive.

Prov. Los niños de pequeños, que no ay castigo después para ellos: Curb children when they are little, for afterwards there is no punishment for them. A true saying, that they must be form'd in their infancy, because afterwards it is hard to break them.

Prov. Si el niño llorare, acállalo su madre; si no quisiere callar, déxelo llorar: If the child cries, let the mother hush it; and if he will not be hush'd, she must let him cry. This was taken from two scholars, who travelling to Salamanca with little money, and good stomachs, came to an inn, where there was a child cry'd so incessantly, that many passengers would not stay because of the noise. The scholars ask'd why he cry'd, and the mother answering she did not know, one of them told her, he had a spell that would hush him; the parents promised to treat them both for it, and one of them going aside, writ the words of this proverb on a piece of paper, lapp'd it up in a piece of green silk, seal'd it up, and hung it about the child's neck. The child weary with crying, and pleas'd with that bauble, was hush'd. The parents pleas'd, treated the scholars very well; and a long time after desiring to know this spell, open'd the silk, and found these words on the paper, and were ever laugh'd at by all that heard the story.

Prov. Al niño y al mulo en el culo: You must strike a child and a mule on the breech; and not in other parts, where it may hurt them.

Prov. Quién con niños se échá, cagando se levanta: He who lies down with children, rises besot. This is literally true; but met. it signifies, that those who rely on children, spoil all their business.

NOB

NUE'RA, a daughter-in-law, a son's wife. Lat. nurus.

Prov. En quanto fui nuera, nunca tive buena suegra: Whilst I was a daughter-in-law, I never had a good mother-in-law. It is a general observation, that daughters and mothers-in-law are seldom very loving, and thence the saying; but in general it shews, we are subject to be ever finding of fault with others.

Prov. Quién es mi nuera? La de los pendoleros en la rueca: Which is my daughter-in-law? She that has the flax hanging loose in tufts about her distaff. It is natural for the mother-in-law to find fault with her daughter-in-law, which this saying expresses; signifying as much as, that the mother calls the daughter an idle slattern, for having the flax she was to spin, hanging loose in tufts.

Prov. La nuera por la suegra, se cagan a la puerta: Betwixt the mother and the daughter-in-law they spit at the door. That is, whilst they quarrel, no body does the work, and the house is kept nasty.

Prov. La suegra ha de ser rogada, y la olla reposada: The mother-in-law must be intreated, and the pot must be let stand. That is, a mother-in-law, to make her good, must have respect shew'd her; and the pot with the meat, after it is boiled, must stand a while off the fire, which renders the meat, and mends the broth.

Prov. Arremangóse mi nuera, y trastórno en el fuego la caldera: My daughter-in-law tuck'd her self up, and overturned the kettle in the fire. To shew her unhandiness, as all Spanish sayings of mothers-in-law are unlucky. This is used when any body takes much pains, and does things very ill.

NUE'SA and Nüeso, ours; a clownish way of speaking.

NUESTRA'MO, for nuestra amo, our master. In cant, a clerk, or a notary, that goes with the alguaziles, and writes down the crimes of those that are apprehended.

NUE'VA BISCA'YA, a province of North America, to the north-west of the kingdom of Mexico, and bordering on the province of the Zacatecas. It is rich, and abounding in all things necessary for human life, but above all has a mighty treasure in silver mines.

NUE'VA ESPAÑA, the richest kingdom in North America, containing several provinces, and call'd by us indifferently New Spain, or Mexico. Its bounds, as laid out now, extend 400 leagues in length, and 200 in breadth, including the province of Yucatan. They are, on the north the province of Meibocan, and others of North America, on the south the government of Cuatimala, on the east the North Sea, and on the west the South Sea. Besides its vast riches in silver mines, it enjoys a rich soil, producing all things necessary for life, and vast numbers of cattle; the only thing it wants is wine. The climate is for the

the most part pleasant and wholesome, and much more might be said in its commendation, too long for this place, which may be seen in Laet. Aesth. Herrera, and many other authors.

NUEVA FRANCIA, New France, a great part of North America, on both sides the great river Canada, reaching from 40 degrees of north latitude to 55, but a great part of it lies up the inland, upon the back of Virginia and New England. It is in the possession of the French, who have many colonies and forts there, and a very great trade for furs.

NUEVA GALICIA, New Galicia, a province of North America, otherwise called Guadalajara, from its capital city of that name, and by another name, Xalisco, from the principal district in it. On the east and north, it is divided from New Spain, by the morafs of Chiapala; and on the west, it extends to the sea of Californiá; towards the north and north-west, its bounds are not settled as running out among the savage nations. The part inhabited by the Spaniards extends about 300 leagues in length, and 100 in breadth. Under this government are the provinces of Guadalajara, Xalisco, Zacatecas, Chiametla, Culucan, Cinaloa, Nueva Biscaya, and the frontiers of Californiá, Quivira, and New Mexico. The climate is temperate and serene, yet subject to thunder and earthquakes; the land more mountainous than plain, and has rich mines of silver and copper, but none found as yet of gold.

NUEVA INGLATERRA, New England, a large country in North America, first enter'd by the English in 1584; it lies along the ocean, on which it has good harbours; the air is wholesome, but the weather very uncertain; it abounds in wild fowl, wild beasts, and timber, and produces flax, hemp, corn, furs, amber, and iron. In it are 7 good towns, the chief of them Boston.

NUEVA MEXICO, New Mexico, a large province of North America, to the north of New Spain, its bounds not well known; but its principal city is Santa Fe, its air temperate, pleasant and wholsóm, its soil fruitful, and rich in mines of silver.

NUEVA PLYMOUTH, New Plymouth, an English colony in New England.

NUEVO REYNO DE GRANADA, the new kingdom of Granada in South America. It is in length 130 leagues, and about 30 in breadth. On the east it borders on the province of Venezuela, on the north upon Santa Marta, on the west upon the province of Papayan, and towards the south on inland countries, as yet not well known. It is subject to great rains, and full of vast woods, which abound in black cattle and horses, abundance of the latter being sent hence to Peru. Its principal provinces are Bogota and Tuniz, both of them have gold mines and emeralds, but especially Tuniz. The air is temperate and equal, making a continual summer.

NUEVA VALENCIA, New Valencia, a Spanish town in the province of Venezuela in South America, 25 leagues from the city of Santiago, and 7 from the port of Burboton, and 60 from Coro, the metropolis.

NUEVA XLRES, New Xeres, a Spanish colony in the province of Venezuela in South America, 15 leagues south of New Valencia, 21 from New Segovia, and 60 from Coro the metropolis.

NUEVAME'NTE, newly, lately.

NUEVE, nine. Lat. novem.

Las nueve, nine of the clock.

Prov. A las nueve échate y duérme: at nine lie down and sleep. Good advice for those that love going to bed betimes.

NUEYTE, a very obsolete word, scarce to be found for night.

NUEZ, a nut, from the Lat. nux.

Nuez de la gárganta, the nut or knot in the throat.

Nuez de ballista, the nut of the cross-bow.

Nuez de especia, the well-known spice called nutmeg. The tree is about the bigness of a pear-tree, the leaf roundish, but pointed. It grows best in Banda, such as Maluco and Ceilon produce, being less, and not valu'd. The outward rind is fleshy and hard, which the natives eat with salt and vinegar, and is of a pleasant aromatick taste. The Portuguese preserve the whole nutmeg before it is full ripe. The nut is much us'd by the Brachman physicians for all old distempers in the brain, for the palsy, and other distempers that affect the nerves, and for diseases in the matrix. The outward rind, when thorough ripe, is taken off, and is the spice we commonly call mace, which is hot and dry in the third degree, it is believ'd that the antients knew neither the mace nor nutmeg. Nutmeg corrects and cures a stinking breath, clears the eye-sight, comforts the stomach, digests meat, and expels wind; strengthens the liver and milt, and provokes urine. Christ. Aesth. nat. hist. E. Ind.

NUEZES encarceladas. Many are of opinion these are the same sort of wall-nuts we have in Europe, and that if transplanted, they would come to good; whereas, as they now grow wild, there is scarce any coming at the kernel, and therefore they call them encarceladas, that is, imprison'd. F. Jof. Aesth. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 26. p. 258.

Prov. Guáyas padre, que otra hija es nace: Alas father, another daughter is born to you. This they say when one misfortune follows another, supposing it to be the saying of a son to his father, who has almost ruined himself to marry off one daughter, and had another newly born.

Prov. Levantóseme mi padre, sentóseme mi madre: My father rose up, and my mother sat down. This they say, when a man is disappointed of some advantage he expected by the death or removal of another, and a third person more powerful takes it away. As when the father rises, and the son thinking to sit down in his place, the mother comes and possesses it.

Prov. Los padres a jugadas, los hijos a pulgadas: Fathers by the acre, and sons by the inch. That is, tho' a rich man has many acres, if he divides his estate among many sons, it is so less'n'd that they may measure by inches.

Prov. Miente el padre al hijo, y no el yilo al granizo: The father belies his son, but not the frost the hail. That is, fathers and sons do not answer one another's expectations, but the frost never fails to follow the hail.

Prov. Mi padre salió a siete, y mataronlo: My father went out to fight seven men, and they kill'd him. Apply'd to those who boast of rash or foolish attempts, and suffer for them.

Prov. Nuestros padres, a pulgadas y nosotros a braçadas: Our parents by the inch, and we by the fathom. That is, they spent sparingly, and we extravagantly.

Prov. Andar con élla padre, que yo la vengaré: Go on with it father, for I'll revenge it. A father having receiv'd a cut a-cross his face in quarrel, was going home to be dress'd, and his son running after him, cry'd, go on with it father, for I'll revenge it. Apply'd to those who are unconcern'd, and offer fruitless comfort when the da-page is receiv'd and cannot be remedy'd.

Prov. Padre dame pán, hijo cáta a Hita: Father give me bread, son look there is Hita. That is, the town of Hita; for a father travelling with his son, the son being hungry, ask'd for bread, and the father answer'd, there is the town of Hita. Apply'd to those who either answer nothing to the purpose when any thing is ask'd of them, or else put one off with long delays, as it was, being ask'd for bread, to say, there is the town.

Prov. Quién padre tiene alcalde següro va a juicio: He whose father is judge goes safe to his trial. There is no danger his father should condemn him. It is apply'd to all that have powerful friends. As is always seen, that powerful men are never punished.

Prov. Quitáos padre, posérse ha mi madre: Stand aside father that my mother may rest her. When the mother wears the breeches, the children command their father.

Prov. Entre padres, y hermanos, no méas tus manos: Do not put your hands betwixt fathers and brothers. That is, do not intermeddle, or concern your self in their affairs, for such near relations will be reconcil'd and will all fall upon you.

Prov. Padre viejo, y manga rota, no es deshonra: An old father and a torn sleeve are no disgrace. Dishonour consists in base and dishonourable actions, not in age or cloaths.

Pálo de la China, China root, it grows in great plenty in China, and is also found in Malabar, Cochin, Cranganor, Conlam, Tanor, and other places. It is a plant very full of small branches, the biggest no thicker than a man's little finger. The root is 'bout the bigness of a man's wrist, or leis, solid, heavy, white, and some reddish; many of them are found sucking together. It is much us'd throughout the east, for all pains in the joints, for obstructions, weakness of stomach, inveterate headaches and coughs, sciatica, gout, palsy, and cold imposthumes. It is generally taken with honey or sugar, that is so preserv'd, or else powder'd in wine, or boil'd in water, as we drink tea. In China they eat this root when fresh, boil'd with their meat, as we do turnips. They also distill a water from it, us'd by the better sort. Monardes says it now grows in New Spain.

Pálo de la sierpe, a plant, whercof there are two sorts, the one growing like the ivy, and looking at a distance like a natural snake, the leaves like briony. It is accounted an excellent remedy against the bite of snakes or adders, and most Indians carry it about them to defend themselves against those creatures, which they say fly from the smell of it, and if they touch it, presently die. The other sort is very slender, with small longish leaves, soft and smooth, of a dark green. The root of it macerated in wine or water, is a certain cure for all bites of venomous serpents, all other poysons, and several distempers; and the Indians affirm any man is safe against those creatures, only carrying it in his hand. There is also a great tree called by this name, and has the same virtue. Christ. Acst. nat. hist. E. Ind.

PIMENTA'DO, pepper'd.

PIMENTA'R, to pepper.

PIMENTERO, a pepper-box, or cafter.

PIMENTÓN, Guinea pepper, which grows in long green cods, and when dry, turns red, being full of yellowish flat seeds; both the cod and seeds very hot; pickled green they are excellent, but very strong.

PIMIENTA, pepper; the plant it grows on is like a vine, but is always close to a tree or pole, up which it runs to the very top; it bears within a year, but more every year after; it is knotty at small distances, and out of every knot grows a leaf, sharp at the end, of a dark green on the inside, and a light green without; the root is very small and superficial; at every stalk of a leaf grows a cluster of pepper, some of which have fifty corns, and the least 30; the pepper, when green, is pluck'd like capers, to eat; and in India they call it ackor. The plants of the white and black pepper differ in nothing, but that the leaf of the white is thinner, and somewhat smother; the white pepper is better than the black, either for taste, relish, or wholesomeness. There is also a sort of long pepper, the plant whereof differs from the other, and the pepper it self is much inferior to both the white and black. This long pepper grows in Bengala and Yaoa, the white and black along the coast of Malabar, and some other places, but not so good. There is another sort, which is hollow, and call'd among them, canarin. The Malabars call pepper molang; the Canarines, miri; in Malaca, lada; in Arabia, filfil; in Guzurat and Decan, meriche; in Bengala, morvis; in Greek, peperi; in Latin, piper; in Portuguese, pimenta; in Catalonia, pebre; in Italian, pepe; in French, poivre; in High-Dutch, pfeffer; in Flemish, pejeren. This and more to the purpose in Acoft. nat. hist. Ind.

PIMIENTA de Tabasco, Tabasco pepper, because growing in that province on very large trees, called by the Indians, xocoxochitl; the leaves of the tree are like those of an orange-tree, very odoriferous; the flowers of a deep red, smelling like the orange-flower; the fruit is round, growing in clusters, first green, then red, and at last black, of a sharp bitter taste, and a good smell, hot and dry in the third degree, so that it is us'd instead of pepper; it cherishes the heart and stomach, is good for the matrix, expels wind, opens obstructions, and provokes urine and the monthly terms.

Pimienta luenga, long pepper; it is a very good sort of pepper, growing in the West-Indies, on a long stalk, about which the grains of pepper stick, and when dry, easily rub off. Monardes, fol. 86.

Pimienta de Jamaica, Jamaica pepper; it is not unlike the common black pepper, with this difference, that there is a little mark on one part of it, like the head of a clove, and it has the taste of clove, as well as of pepper, and is therefore call'd by some all-spice.

Tener una cosa pimienta, for a thing to have pepper, is what we say, it is saucy, that is, it is very dear.

PINIPINICHI, a small tree in the West Indies, like an apple-tree; the Indians cut a twig, or branch of it, whence there flows a thickish and glutinous sort of milk, called Lêche de pinipinichi, three or four drops whereof are a strong purge, and quick in operation; it is also dry'd to a powder, and so taken in a very small quantity, because of its violent operation; as soon as one takes broth or drinks wine, it has done working. It is hot and dry in the third degree. Monardes, fol. 28.

PISA, a pine-apple. Those we see in England have nothing in them, but in Spain, and other countries, every knob on them contains a small and very sweet kernel.

PINA, the pine-apple of the West Indies, is as big, and shap'd like our pine-apple, but differs in all other respects, because it has no kernels, nor little partitions, but is all an eatable pulp, taking off the outward rind; it has an excellent smell, and is very pleasant to eat; the taste of it is sweet and sharp, and juicy; they cut them in slices, and lay them a while in salt and water. It grows on a long reed or stalk, which springs up among abundance of leaves, like a lily; on the top of each of them is the pine-apple. It grows in hot and moist countries; they make an excellent conserve of them. F. Jof. Acoft. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 19. p. 243.

PLASTA'R, to squat, beat, or crush together; also to daub or plaister.

PLA'TA, silver, the metal next in value to gold. It is generally found in mines on stony desert mountains, tho' some little has been found in the plain. There are two sorts of veins, one whereof they call loose, the other fixt. The loose are only pieces of oar found in some chance place, which once taken away there is no more. The fix'd veins, or those which spread out every way in depth, and on all sides, like the body of a tree and its branches. The Indian way of refining the oar was by melting, which makes the metal run one way and the dross another. To this purpose at Potosí they made little earthen fire-pans, which they call guairas, with holes all round them, on which they plac'd the crucible, and setting these pans on the tops of the mountains, the wind that blows there constantly melted the oar, which could not be made to run with any bellows whatsoever. The silver of the mines of Porco runs better with bellows. But the method most in use now is to separate the silver from the dross with quick-silver, thus: They pound the oar to dust in mills, and sift it as we do rubbish to make mortar, then they steep that fine dust in brine made of salt, that the salt may loosen the earth from the metal, then through a fine cloth they squeeze the quicksilver out upon that mass, so that it falls like a dew, which they work up, mould, and incorporate with it. Thus it us'd to lie together, and was moulded over several times for twenty days, till the quicksilver had wrought its effect; but now making fires in vaults under it, they find it is prepar'd in five days by the heat. When the quicksilver has drawn all the metal to it, they put this mass into great troughs of water, where they wash it till all the dross runs off, and the pure metal remains behind. The clean silver they squeeze in a cloth, which fetches out all the quicksilver that is not incorporated in it. The rest of the mass, made like a sugar-loaf, is cover'd over with an earthen pan of that shape, and a great fire being made about it, all the quicksilver runs out at a pipe, like distill'd water from a limbeck, and the silver remains in the same shape, and as big as it was put in, but only the fifth part in weight of what it was, being all like a honeycomb, where the quicksilver has been extracted. Then it is cast into bars, and carry'd to the king's stamping-house, where it is try'd, and the mark set upon it according to its fine-

PLA'TANO, the common plane-tree. Lat. platanus.

PLA'TANO, or rather Plantano, the plantane, is a tree in the West Indies, which had this name given it by the Spaniards, but for what reason is not known, since there is not the least resemblance betwixt this and the plane-tree of Europe. This Indian plantan has one body or root in the ground, from which many shoots run up without touching one another, but every one grows up, and becomes as it were a distinct tree, with leaves so large, that one of them will cover a man almost from head to foot, of a very fine glossy green. When it is a fathom and an half, or two fathoms high, it bears only one cluster of plantans, sometimes more, sometimes less in number, and I have told 300 upon one cluster. Every plantan is above a span long, more or less, and two or three inches thick, though they vary very much. The rind is easily taken off, and all the rest is a solid tender pulp, very good to eat, being wholsom and nourishing, and rather cold than hot. Sometimes the branches are gather'd green, and ripen in great jars close cover'd with an herb peculiar for that purpose. If they let them ripen on the tree they are better relish'd, and smell like choice pippins. They last almost all the year, for new shoots are continually running up from the trunk of the plantan, and when one has done, another begins to bear, another is half grown, another shoots out anew, so that they succeed one another all the year about. As soon as the cluster is gather'd, they cut down that branch or shoot, for it never bears more than one, and once, but the trunk or root remains and shoots afresh till it is spent, which is for several years. It requirs much moisture and heat. They throw ashes on the root to improve it, and there are woods of plantans which are very profitable, because it is the fruit most generally used in the West Indies. They make wine of it, and eat it raw, roasted, several ways dress'd and preserved. The branches are neither good for fire nor any other use, but the leaves may serve to write on in case of necessity. F. Jof. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 21. pag. 247.

RU YBA'RO, rhubarb, an excellent remedy, found no where but in China, whence it is carried to all parts. The best is the freshest, which has something of a dark red, bitter, and astringent to the taste; and which chew'd, dies like saffron: it is hot and dry in the second degree, has some earthy parts which make it astringent, some airy, whence its lightness, and some fiery, which cause its bitterness. Rhubarb is so safe a medicine, that it is given at all times, and to children, and women with child. To purge and cleanse the inward parts, they give the infusion of it, and the powder of it to bind; mix'd with spikenard, it has the better effect. It will not bear decoction, for then it loses its virtue; it purges choler and flegm, cleanses the stomach, strengthens the liver and milt, opens obstructions, purges the blood, is good against the yellow jaundice and dropsy, allays burning fevers, and stops the bloody-flux. Christ. Acosta. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

RU Y'DO, noise; Aruendo, because the things that fall make a noise. Met. a fray, a disturbance, a hurlyburly.

VICU'ÑAS, are a sort of wild beasts in the kingdom of Peru, somewhat resembling goats, but without horns, and bigger than goats, and less than large calves. No other part of the world has them but Peru and Chile, where they live on the highest mountains, and most solitary and coldest places, which the Indians call Punas. The frost and snow is so far from hurting, that they seem pleasing to them. Their colour is a light murrey. They go in flocks, and are very swift, flying from men, or other beasts, as being very fearful; and when they fly they drive their young before them. They do not appear to increase much, and therefore the Inga Kings had forbid hunting them but upon great solemnities. Since the coming of the Spaniards too much liberty has been allow'd; the Indians meet 2 or 3000, and making a ring, close by degrees, and catch as many as they please, letting go the females to breed. They shear them, and of their wool make the finest coverlets or blankets in the world; for it is as soft as silk, very lasting, and the colour being natural, never fades. They are cool and good for hot weather; and some say they are wholesom for inflammations, or the gout. The flesh of them is not good; but the Indians eat it. The fame flesh just kill'd applied to the eyes, infallibly asswages any pain in them. These beasts also afford the precious Bezoar stone. F. Jof. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 40. pag. 299.

V I D

Vin, a vine. Lat. vinis. It is also that part of a woman which comes out with the after-birth, so call'd because it is knotty.

VÍDA, life. Lat. Vita.

Hombre de buena, o de mala vida, a good. or an ill liver.

Darse buena vida, to live at one's ease.

Prov. No es la vida del leal, mas de quanto quiere el traydor: An honest man lives no longer than a treacherous villain pleases. Because a good man fearing nothing is always expos'd to the treachery of villains.

Prov. Al inférmo que es de vida, el agua le es medicina: Water is a medicine to a sick man that is destin'd to live. When God has decreed a man shall live, the most insignificant thing, as water, will contribute to his cure.

Prov. En la vida la mugér, tres salidas ha de hazér: In this world a woman must go abroad thrice. Subintelligitur, and no more. And these goings out are to be christned, to be marry'd, and to be bury'd.

Prov. Buena vida, padre, y madre olvida: A good easy life forgets father and mother. That is, they who are at their ease never trouble themselves for father, mother, or friends.

Prov. Dáte buena vida, temerás mas la caída: Live at your ease and you'll be the more afraid to fall. The happier a man is in this world, the more cause he has to fear a change.

Prov. La vida del perdido, poco dinero, y háto vino: An extravagant man's man's life consists in little money, and wine enough. That is, so he has but enough for his debauches he values no more.

Prov. Quién ama la casada, la vida trae empuñada: He who loves a marry'd woman has his life as it were borrow'd, or holds it upon courtesy. Because whensoever the husband finds it out he kills him.

Prov. Vida sin amigo, muerte sin testigo: A life without a friend ends in death without a witness. He that has no friends in his life-time has no body to attend him at his death.

Prov. Méda vida es la candela, pan y vino la otra méda: Fire and candle is one half of man's support, and wine and bread the other half. They are the most necessary things for man in this world.

Prov. La vida y el alma, mas no el packfaddle: Life and soul, but not the packfaddle. This bears a double interpretation either of a man, falsely pretending that he will venture soul and body to serve his friend, and yet refuses him the least kindness, as lending of a packfaddle. Or otherwise, when men will really venture their lives and their souls to serve their friends, but when their estates are concern'd then they leave them.

Prov. La vida del grillo, de día hambre de noche ruido: The cricket's life, who endures hunger all day, and at night makes a noise. Said of wicked Men who dare not show their heads all day, and at night breed quarrels, or hubbubs, to rob, or to other ill intents.

VIE

VIEGECI'CA Viegecilla, or Viegecita, a little old woman.

VIE'JA, an old woman.

Prov. Vieja barbada, de lejos la saluda: Salute an old woman that has a beard at a distance, because those women are superstitiously look'd upon as witches.

Prov. No digáis después, sué vieja y no se cozió: Do not say afterwards, it was old and would not boil tender. This is a warning to do things in time, or to take heed how we do them, taken from a woman, who having a fowl to boil for her husband's dinner, set it on so late that it was not boil'd enough, and excus'd her self, alledging it was old.

Prov. Poco a poco hila la vieja el copo: Little by little the old woman spins out her distaff full. That is, patience and application carry one thro' any work, tho never so tedious.

Prov. Vieja escarmentada, pásala el vado arregañada: An experienc'd old woman passes the ford with her coats tuck'd up. Young fools would pass thro' difficulties without ruffling their dress, but the old and experienc'd tuck up their coats; that is, lay aside all forms to make themselves easy.

Prov. Mas vale vieja con dineros, que moça con cabellos: An old woman with money is better than a young woman with fine hair. Wealth is better than beauty.

Prov. Ni tan vieja que amule, ni tan moça que retice: You must not chuse a wife so old that she cannot chew her meat, nor so young as to be wanton and skip about.

Prov. Vieja a esfirar, y el diablo a arrugar: The old woman does nothing but pull out, and the devil wrinkles. That is, the old woman would put out the wrinkles of her face, and thinks the devil puts them in.

Prov. Castigar vieja, y espulgar pe- lón, dos devaneos son: To correct an old woman, and to louse a poor scoundrel are two pieces of folly, or labour lost. Because an old woman is past mending, and a poor lousy fellow will never be clear.

Prov. Gustó la vieja los blédos, y lamiose los dedos: the old woman tastes the blites, and lick'd her fingers. Apply'd to liquorish people who lick their fingers after every thing they like.

VIEJAME'NTE, oldly.

VIE'JO, Adject. old. Lat. vetus.

Prov. De oficial nuevo, y de barbéro viejo, y de amigo reconciliado, y de viento que entra por borado, y de madrastra que el nombre le basta, y de almado, a tus hijos guarda dios de padrastro: From a new, or unskilful workman, and from an old barber-surgeon, and from a reconcil'd friend, and from a wind that comes in at a hole, or cranny, and from a stepmother, whose name alone is enough, and from a son-in-law, or wife's son, and from a stepfather, God defend your children! Because the new workman is unskilful and does his work ill; an old barber's hand shakes, and he neither shaves nor bleeds well; a reconcil'd friend is seldom real; the wind thro' a hole, or cranny is hurtful; a stepmother in all parts has no good name; a wife's son is not lov'd by the father-in-law, and the mother rakes all she can for him; and a stepfather is as bad as a stepmother.

Viejo, Subst. an old man.

Prov. Mas vale viejo que me honre, que galán que me asombre: Better have an old man to honour me, than a young rake to fright me. The saying of a prudent young woman, who rather chuses a grave old man for her husband, than a mad young bully.

Prov. Al viejo nunca le falta que contar, ni al sol, ni al hogár: An old man never wants a tale to tell, either in the sun, or at the fire. Because having liv'd long they can never want talk.

Prov. El viejo por no poder, y el moço por no saber dexan las cosas perder: The old man lets things run to rack for want of strength, or vigour, and the young man for want of knowledge.

Prov. Quando el viejo no puede beber, la buéssa le pueden hazer: When an old man cannot drink they may make his grave.

Prov.

Prov. Quién viejo engorda, dos mocedades goza: He who grows fat in old age, enjoys youth twice.

Prov. Viejo amador, invierno con flor: An amorous old man is like flowers in winter.

Prov. Aunque seas prudente viejo, no desdénas el consejo: Tho you be a discreet old man, yet do not despise advice. Good counsel is always to be hearkned to.

Prov. Del viejo el consejo: Take the advice of an old man.

Prov. El viejo en su tierra, y el moço en la agéna, mienten de una manera: The old man in his own country, and the young man in another country are liars alike. The old man telling stories of many years past, and the young man of his travels, take both the liberty of lying.

Prov. Quién quisiere ser mucho tiempo viejo, comiencelo presto: He that would be long old must begin betimes. We say, he that would be young when he is old, must be old when he is young.

Prov. Viejo sobre potro, un diablo sobre otro: An old man on a colt is one devil upon another. That is, an old man who acts like a young one riding a colt is a devil, and the colt being naturally wild and fretted by the rider is another.

Prov. Si quieres vivir sano, haze viejo temprano: If you would be healthy, be old betimes. That is, take care of your self as old men do.

VIELDA'R, to fan corn.

Prov. Después que parí nunca mi vientre henchí: Since I bore children I never fill'd my belly. It has a double meaning, either of a poor mother, who spares from her self to give to her children. Or of any other who is solicitous to look to them that she has not time to eat.

Prov. El vientre ayuno, no oye a ninguno: An empty belly hears no body. That is, a man when he is hungry is not fit to be advis'd, or spoke to about business.

Prov. Mal áya el vientre, que del pan comido no se le viene miente, a curse on the belly that does not remember bread that is eaten. A curse on ingratitude.

Prov. Sacar el vientre de mal año: To deliver the belly from an evil year. Is to make use of one's time, and feed heartily when it is to be had after fasting hard.

Prov. Ciento de un vientre, y cada uno de su miente: An hundred of one belly, and every one of his particular mind. So many men so many minds. Tho they be all brothers, born of one mother.

VIE'RNES, Friday. Lat. dies veneris.

La semana que no siene viérnes, the week that has no Friday. There is no such, but by it they mean Christmas week, when Christmas day falls on a Friday, because then they eat flesh on it, and therefore reckon it no Friday.

Viérnes santo, good Friday.

VIE'LTE, Viento, vid. Ventér.

VIESTI'R, Obs. for Vestir.

VIG

VI'GA, a beam.

Viga de lagár, the great beam over the wine-press, which presses the grapes to squeeze the wine out.

Viga madre, the main beam, the girder that bears all the joists.
